DEDICATION

This research study is dedicated to my late brothers; Gladson and Eleson, and sisters; Everestina, Denia and Felita who didn't live to see the successes of their youngest brother.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am very grateful to my supervisors Prof. Dixie Maluwa Banda and Mr. L. Mpekasambo for their expertise and untiring support and encouragement rendered to me during the course of my research work. I really appreciated your commitment and your encouragements for me to finish the work.

I would also like to thank the management of Domasi College of Education through the leadership of the Principal of the college Dr Elias Chakwera for funding my studies.

Special thanks should also go to Dr Fred Msiska for his critical analysis on my topic of study. His criticisms on the topic assisted me to develop the culture of looking at issues with a critical mind in the society.

In addition thanks should also go to the Division Manager of Central West Education Division (CWED), headmasters, teachers and students of the two public schools for allowing me to conduct my study in their schools.

Finally, I would like to thank my parents, sisters, nieces and nephews for their enthusiasm and support during the course of my study. Special thanks should also go to my wife Bertha for her patience and encouragement during my time of study.

ABSTRACT

The purpose of this study was to explore if punishments administered in the selected secondary schools in CWED achieve their purpose of addressing discipline and order in the schools. The study utilized the qualitative approach with phenomenological as the main strategy which emphasizes on collecting data from the concerned individuals themselves. Data was collected through semi-structured interviews, document reviews and a questionnaire which was administered to pupils. The study had a sample of 112 pupils, eight teachers and two deputy head teachers. The results indicated that commonly used punishments are the internal corrective measures, especially manual work and rustication. The results also indicate that forms of punishments which require pupils to go home or those which require calling of parents such as rustication and suspension have more impact on the behaviour of punished pupils as well as on the school community. On the other hand, despite manual work being frequently used punishment in the schools it was indicated that it has little impact on the behaviour of both the punished pupils and the school community. In addition, the study found that for the punishments to be more effective there is need to involve parents in the punishment decisions.
